

Then you'll remember me

from
The Bohemian Girl

Arline, daughter of a nobleman, as a child was kidnapped and raised by gypsies. In the gypsy camp she came to fall in love with Thaddeus, and he with her. In the opera's second act, Arline is reunited with her father. Thaddeus thinks it best that she be with her kindred, so he sadly lets her go. The third act finds Arline living in her father's castle, vaguely unsatisfied, nostalgic for her gypsy life and her lover. Thaddeus misses her, too, and he appears at her window to sing this serenade.
